Greg Chapman is the EMS program director at Hudson Valley Community College in Troy, N.Y.

He has been involved in EMS since 1975, working as a full time educator for more than 20 years. He also is trained as a registered respiratory therapist. Believing that you can't teach what you don't do, Chapman continues to work part time as a paramedic and also serves as an assistant fire chief in his hometown.

As a long-time member of NAEMT's PHTLS Committee, Chapman has been involved in developing the last three editions of PHTLS. In addition to serving as a regular lecturer at national and international conferences, Chapman has published in many textbooks and has written numerous journal articles.

An avid skier, Chapman works part time in the winter as a professional ski patroller and search and rescue specialist.
